

Cultivating Healing, Advocacy, Nonviolence, Growth, and Equity (CHANGE) Grant

Black, Indigenous, and other People of Color (BIPOC) continue to be marginalized and traumatized by dehumanizing and discriminatory laws and policies. It is clear we all need to do more to uproot colonial institutions and systems, and to make reparations for the generations of injustice, violence, and health inequities experienced by BIPOC communities.

The Trauma Psychology Division is committed to human welfare, liberation, and social change. For this reason, we are excited to offer the CHANGE grant for a second year. The intent of this funding is to support projects that advocate for change and promote equity as vehicles for growth and healing. At this time, we plan to support 3-5 projects with awards of $3000 to $5000 each.

Description: The purpose of this grant is to support student or early career psychologist (ECP, i.e., 10 years within receipt of their degree) led collaborative projects aimed at identifying and dismantling all forms of systemic racism, discrimination, and violence. Examples include projects focused on the following:

- Improving transdisciplinary and intervention research methods and approaches addressing trauma disparities
- Understanding the historical and ongoing sociopolitical and systemic causes, mechanisms, consequences and solutions to racial trauma and health disparities
- Identifying the ways in which individuals identifying as BIPOC and their communities thrive
- Developing trauma-informed, culturally tailored and sustainable programs that promote well-being
- Providing access to trauma psychology information and services to underserved individuals and communities
- Restorative justice practices

Projects that will be considered include basic or applied scientific studies, community-based participatory research, action research, citizen science models, dissemination or implementation efforts, public or professional trainings, intervention programs, community capacity-building initiatives, or social/policy advocacy or analyses.

Funds are not provided for indirect costs to the institution.

Eligibility:

- Applicants must be a Student or Early Career member of APA's Division 56.
- Funds will not be released to an awardee until documentation verifying institutional approval to conduct the study is received (e.g., IRB approval letter for research studies).
- The grant recipient is required to provide a project summary, including a financial report, upon completion of the project year, that may be used by Division 56 for future promotional, educational and/or programmatic purposes
- The Division acknowledges how historic systems have contributed to inequities in higher education and funding opportunities for individuals who are BIPOC. As such, BIPOC applicants are strongly encouraged to apply.
- BIPOC applicants not focusing on racism, but still have their work on trauma, will also be considered for this grant.
